Juan de la Rosa. Memorias del último soldado de la Independencia (Spanish Edition) Nataniel Aguirre
Juan de la Rosa. Memorias del último soldado de la Independencia de Nataniel Aguirre (Cochabamba, Bolivia, 1843–Montevideo, Uruguay, 1888), se publicó en 1885 en Cochabamba, Bolivia. Es una novela que narra hechos esenciales de la historia nacional boliviana, en tiempos del primer levantamiento por la independencia en Cochabamba. Los sucesos son contados por uno de los rebeldes bolivianos sobreviviente, Juan de la Rosa que, en su vejez reconstruye su vida en Cochabamba, los episodios históricos entre 1809 y 1811, la muerte de su madre, la represión española, la resistencia, victorias y derrotas en la guerra de independencia.

El autor logra recrear la cotidianidad de Cochabamba, una ciudad de finales del siglo XIX, desde la ficción. El personaje recuerda el proceso histórico y los ideales que dieron lugar a la república boliviana; pero también pone en voz de la «memoria» los espacios familiares, los detalles personales y la tensión entre la vida pública y privada.

Algunos investigadores, como el boliviano Gustavo V. García, sostienen que la obra no pertenece a Nataniel Aguirre. Según García, Aguirre habría editado la novela —cuyo verdadero autor sería el coronel Juan de la Rosa o Juan Altamirano Calatayud— y ayudado a corregirla.

El problema está que en la primera edición, de 1885, no hay ninguna referencia a Aguirre: la novela, titulada Cochabamba. Memorias del último soldado de la Independencia, está firmada por Juan de la Rosa, que es el personaje principal: Juanito, seguido del nombre de su madre Rosita.
